Contributors to this issue:

Virginia Caputo is a Ph.D. student in Social Anthropology at York University in Toronto. Her work investigates issues of gender, ethnomusicology, and culture theory. Her present research focuses on the musical cultures of childhood and youth.

Lawrence Kramer teaches at Fordham University, Lincoln Center, and is an active composer as well as the author of Music and Poetry: the Nineteenth Century and After and Music as Cultural Practice: 1800-1900.

Mitchell Morris is a Ph.D. student in Musicology at the University of California, Berkeley. When he is not writing about gay men and opera, he is working on his dissertation, tentatively entitled Musical Eroticism and the Transcendent Strain: the Work of Alexander Skryabin, 1903-1909.

Karen Pegley is a Ph.D. student in Musicology at the University of Toronto. Her current interest is in the construction of gender in North American popular culture and twentieth-century opera.

Judith A. Peraino is a Ph.D. student in Musicology at the University of California, Berkeley. Her interests include music and medieval culture, American popular music and the implications of gay/lesbian theory for music.

Gregory Salmon was a Ph.D student in Musicology at the University of California, Berkeley. At the time of his death in Leningrad, he was conducting IREX-supported research for his dissertation on “Musorgsky and the Idea of History.”